

> General: What advice have you for a pilot who's told by ATC to call after landing?

James Cooling is Principal and founder of Cooling & Herbers, P.C., in Kansas City, Missouri. His answer to by Business & Commercial Aviation:

"There is no legal requirement to return the call, but most pilots want to. We advise that you call your attorney, have one, call us, and then together call the tower or FSDO. A professional pilot can't afford to have a black mark. The FAA can be aggressive and a controller can elicit information that can do an innocent buy unknowing pilot. A good idea to have a third party who knows the regs on your side. And also file a NASA report within ten days. If an inspector asks for your license during a ramp check, show it — those are the rules — but he can't keep it. We're not out of anything, but we don't want pilots to suffer from a misinterpretation of the regulations."

From:

"Fast Five" by William Garvey

Business & Commercial Aviation Magazine

November 2013, page 23

Goto www.AviationWeek.com/bca

Unique solution ID: #1108

Author: William Garvey

Last update: 2014-04-06 00:02